

Laying the Foundation for Proportional Reasoning

Ann Downton
Australian Catholic University
<Ann.Downton@acu.edu.au>

Multiplicative thinking is required when engaging in proportional reasoning tasks. While proportional reasoning does not always develop naturally in students, providing students from a young age with tasks that require students to think multiplicatively may lay the foundation for them to do so. This paper reports the findings of Grade 3 students' performance on tasks relating to different multiplicative structures and the influence of each structure on students strategy choice.